The Brother Jonathan

The Ute gives the following additional particulars of the great calamity:

STATEMENT OF DAVID FARRELL, STEERAGE STEWARD.

On Saturday, before the wreck the wind commenced blowing fearfully, and continued until the wreck and after. On Sunday, at 12 o'clock the Captain took the sun and got our position. Finding the storm was likely to continue, he rounded to with the hope of making Crescent City, where he intended to lay at anchor until the storm abated. After we rounded to, we ran for Crescent City I suppose for thirty or forty minutes, when the ship struck. She struck very hard, apparently about half way between her stem and foremast. She did not appear to strike her stem but raised on the swell and settled directly upon the rock. The next sea that struck her carried her as far on to the rock as her foremast. Her bottom was badly torn to pieces, and her foremast dropped through until stopped by the yard arm. She remained swinging at the mercy of the waves until she sunk. The officers were very cool, and were doing all in their power to save the lives of the passengers, who were very calm under the circumstances.

When Captain DeWolf found the ship was bound to sink, he walked forward and coolly said: "All hands aft and try to save yourselves." The first boat that was lowered was the forward boat on the port side, and was swamped; its crew were swimming around her. When we last saw her there was one man sitting astride of her, and she was upside down. The next boat that was lowered was on the starboard side of the ship, directly astern of the wheel. This was under the charge of Campbell, the second mate, and contained a large number of ladies, but was swamped before she was free from the davits; her stem was smashed in against the ship's side. The First Officer, Allen, hauled her passengers on board ship again. The Captain, who was standing on the hurricane deck just aft the wheel-house, spoke to me, and told me to put the plugs into the boat swinging at the starboard davits, just astern of the last that had been swamped. I did so, and he then told me to remain in her, for the purpose of keeping the men out of her, and told me to take as many women as would go. I did so.

John P. Hensley brought two women and tried to get them into the boat, but could not succeed; they begged him to let them go, which he did. Seeing that the women would not get in, I said: "John, you had better get in yourself," but he said he would not; that he would stay and assist others in saving their lives. I then said: "John, if you will not go, give me a bucket." He leaped from the hurricane to the upper or pilot deck, and gave me one of the fire buckets that were in a rack on the wheel-house. I tried again to induce him to come, but he would not, saying that there was already enough in the boat. Allen then commenced lowering us down. John Hensley was the last man I spoke to, and his last words to me were: "Keep cool and save yourselves—good-by!" When we struck the water the ship rolled over on us and nearly sunk us, but we escaped with only the loss of all our starboard thole-pins. We had hard work to clear the ship, which we could only do by pushing the boat around under the ship's stem. In this manner we managed to get steerage way and the use of our oars. We started immediately for shore. We were running quartering with the waves, which broke over us on nearly every crest, at times nearly filling the boat, and had it not been for the bucket that was given us by our brave-hearted shipmate, John Hensley, there would probably never have been a soul saved to give tidings of the terrible disaster.

After we left the ship, there were two guns fired; we looked back at the ship and saw her smokestacks go by the board. We then went down into the trough of the sea so far as to make it impossible to see the ship. When we arose on the next crest, I saw the signal of distress flying at the mizzenmast head. We were again let down into the trough of the sea, and when we came up again, the ship had entirely disappeared. I think the waves drove her over the rocks, and that she went down stem first. We were about three hours in getting to Crescent City, I should think. The water was very cold, and I think it would have not been possible for a man to have lived more than ten hours had any tried to save themselves by means of life-preservers or drift of any kind where they would have been exposed to the water. The people of Crescent City treated us kindly, and there were three or four boats, including the one in which we were saved, dispatched at once for the wreck, but after getting outside a short distance, they were forced to return, as the seas ran so high as to make it impossible for them to go farther.

The officers were all very brave men, and though death was staring them in the face, they were cool and sensible.

STATEMENT OF MRS. STOTT.

Mrs. Stott, who was on her way to Victoria, with her little son, six or seven years of age, was among those who were saved and returned by the Del Norte. She says that she had been somewhat sick on Sunday morning, and remained upon the hurricane deck in company with her son and a girl named Elizabeth Wild, who was on her way to Victoria with Mrs. Keenan. When the vessel struck, she noticed that everything about the deck appeared to be loose and the whole vessel apparently shattered. A moment after, planks came up alongside from the steamer's bottom. She got into the small boat as soon as possible with her son and the girl Wild. Meantime, everything was being done by officers, crew and male passengers to save the ladies. She thinks there were no ladies who came on deck who were not got into the boats. She heard some of the gentlemen passengers say, just before she got into the boat, that they were all right, but an instant after somebody said that the fires were all out. Mrs. General Wright came to the side of the boat in which Mrs. Stott was saved, and was going to get in, but Captain De Wolf, who seemed to think the boat too full already, took hold of her arm and walked her toward the opposite side of the vessel, where they were getting into a larger boat, which was swamped in lowering it into the water. Most of the ladies were below in their rooms, sick, and never came upon deck at all. Many of the gentlemen and some of the ladies got hold of life-preservers, but they did not prove of the least use. Two young men with whom Mrs. Stott was talking had them on, and one of them went below to get one for her. Neither was saved. The boat which she got into was lowered, and first and came near being swamped in striking the water, but some man on the deck got the fall at the other end of the deck loose, and it went down with a splash, striking, however, right side up. As they went down they noticed a German woman crawling up from the lower deck, with her child tied on her neck, and one of the crew got hold of her by the neck and dragged her into the boat, saving both mother and child. After they got clear of the vessel Mrs. Stott saw Mrs. Keenan, who had been sick in her berth all the morning, struggling in the water. She was partially dressed and had two life preservers tied on her. One of the women in the boat afterward said that Mrs. Keenan was hit on the head and stunned by a plank or one of the boats. The boat was loaded down, and the passengers were obliged to bail incessantly with a bucket and the hat of one of the men. She is positive that Yates, the Quartermaster, did all in his power to get others into this boat, and says that the reason so many of the crew were saved was that this being the smallest boat the officers and gentlemen on board considered it less safe than the others, and sent all the ladies into the larger ones, which were lost. When the boat had got a short distance from the steamer they saw her plunge suddenly bow foremost, and disappear instantly. Mrs. Troudale, an old lady, who had come direct from England and was on her way to Victoria to join her son, was one of the saved.

NOT A "FEDERAL."—Captain Boggs, while in command of the steamer Connecticut was shown an order in the port of Bermuda regulating the anchorage ground for Federal and Confederate vessels. Disregarding this order, he was sent for by the Governor, whom he politely informed that it did not apply to him. "What!" says the Colonel, "are you not an officer of the Federal navy?" "No sir," said the Captain, "I belong to neither the Federal nor the Confederate navy. I have the honor to command the United States gunboat Connecticut and am an officer in the United States Navy. I therefore sir consider that I have a right to anchor in the harbor where I please. I know no such force as the Federal navy."

Traitors or Loyalists

The New York [illegible] a paper which was [illegible] completely [illegible] by the result of the last Presidential election that in its very next issue it [illegible] its attention [illegible] eschew politics entirely thereafter seems to have become somewhat [illegible] again so much so at least as to be able to give us another disquisition on the [illegible] aspects of the party in the advocacy of whose [illegible] it has been so unsuccessful [illegible]. The Journal of Commerce feelingly complains that the loyal people of the United States have dealt with the Democratic party just as if it had been in sympathy with the rebellion. Truly one Democratic paper has hit it at last. The Journal of Commerce has finally obtained light enough to enable it to see what was the reason why its party was so overwhelmingly defeated. This accusation of disloyalty, sustained as it was by the acts movements and utterances of the "Democratic" party from the time the rebellion began gave the loyal party its strength and weakened its opponents, particularly during the last political campaign. Nor did these charges of Democratic sympathy with the rebellion rest on mere unfounded suspicions. The New York riots the Chicago plot, the Indiana conspiracy and the intimate relations which were conclusively proven to have existed between the secret societies of the North and the rebel Government—all these things and others of a like character, establish beyond a peradventure the shameful fact that the "Democratic" party was an active accomplice of those who fought to disrupt the Government. At the Chicago Convention its treasonable proclivities were manifested to such an extent that the war was pronounced a "failure" and we were asked in substance to grant the rebels their asserted independence. Men of known disloyalty took the lead of the party. Their orators called the head of the nation a "tyrant" because he was trying conscientiously to perform his sworn duty in quelling the rebellion. The leaders of the Knights of the Golden Circle had the management of the party, and they obeyed implicitly the behests of the rebel usurpation at Richmond. The Copperhead politicians were in league with the rebel emissaries in Canada, and they jointly laid down a programme for the party to follow. Hear what Pollard, the rebel historian says of this arrangement:

"No doubt can rest in history, that at the time of the Chicago Convention, the Democratic party in the North had prepared a secret programme of operations the final and essential term of which was the acknowledgment of the independence of the Confederate States. It was proposed to get at this conclusion by distinct and successive steps, so as not to alarm too much the Union sentiment of the country. The first step was to be the proposition of the 'Union as it was in a Convention of the States.' If that was voted down then the proposition of a new principle of federation, limited to the foreign relations and to the revenue, if that was rejected, then the proposition of an inter-Confederate Union to preserve as far as possible, by an extraordinary league, the American prestige, and if all these propositions intended as successive tests of the spirit of the South, were to fail, then at last the independence of the Confederate States, made the sine qua non was to be conceded by the Democratic party of the North, as the last resort of pacification, and the one of two alternatives where their choice could no longer hesitate."

Pollard may be presumed to know whereof he affirms. After making the foregoing statement, he adds:

"The plan utterly failed in execution. The fall of Atlanta gave a new lease to the war."

That any great political party should have been so shamefully and criminally disloyal as this, almost surpasses belief. We can conceive how a mere cabal could undertake to betray a nation, but that any considerable party should become so utterly abandoned in its course of treason as to make an attempt to barter away the honor and integrity of their country to traitors—and this without any great endeavor to conceal their nefarious scheme—is a proof a political and moral depravity too deep to be sounded by any except those who are capable of being principals or accessories in so black a crime. Did ever a political party before have a record like this? Shall this criminality ever be forgotten? They are proved to have plotted against their country but a little while ago, must not loyal men remain united in order to thwart their purposes hereafter?

STILL DISSATISFIED.—Not only does the new Constitution of Missouri not suit those who are disfranchised under it, but an effort is also talked of to have it repudiated by force or otherwise notwithstanding it has been adopted by the people. It has been suggested throughout the State that a general convocation of all who are opposed to the instrument, which is so exceptionable to some because it is in conformity with a spirit of loyalty to the Government, be held soon, in order to devise some way to get quit of the instrument. In view of these complaints on the part of those who left Missouri to fight against the Union and now find themselves deprived, by their own criminal conduct of any share in the government of the country which has repudiated them, the St. Louis Democrat thus forcibly illustrates the whole case in issue:

"Certain parties concluded some years ago that they couldn't get their rights under the Government of the United States, that the ballot, as a means of redressing grievances, was a humbug and that, therefore, they would have nothing more to do with either. They accordingly renounce the authority and protection of the Union, spit upon the flag under which they were born, shake the dust of the old homestead from their feet, and march out of it swearing they will have nothing more to do with the Government or any of its works. But after beating round in the wet and cold in quest of their 'rights' until they get most heartily sick and tired, they attempt to get back under the shelter of the old roof, and find that the door which they so unceremoniously opened has been bolted in their faces. Then all at once, they discover that their 'rights' are inside, instead of outside of the house as they formerly supposed, and they grow furious with rage that they are not permitted both to enter and take possession at pleasure."

HON. WILLIAM HIGBY.—Hon William Higby Member of Congress from the Second District of California arrived in this city on Saturday evening, and is now stopping at the Lincoln House. Mr Higby is one of the Committee appointed by the last Congress to inquire into the condition of the various Indian tribes in the United States and he is traveling on business connected with this duty. He had hoped to see Senator Nesmith another of the same Committee here, but that gentleman has gone on a trip up the Columbia river. Mr. Higby comes directly from Crescent City California where he has been visiting the Indian Reservation near that place. It is his intention to return to California very soon, as he will have to make the tour both of a considerable part of the State and also of Nevada before the next Congress assembles.

Mr. Higby proved a very useful and efficient member of the last Congress, as evidenced by the fact that his constituents with an almost unanimous voice, voted last fall to continue him in his place. In the Pacific States where rotation in office is the almost universal rule to be returned to Congress for a second time is quite a flattering testimonial to any member.

FAULKNER.—Several weeks ago it was announced that the President had pardoned Charles J Faulkner of Virginia. This announcement is now contradicted. Certainly of all rebels he is as little deserving of pardon as any. We do not see how any one could consistently be punished if he were permitted to go unharmed.

The following was received by C. C. Beekman from Dugan & Wall, of Crescent City. The Indians report that the body of a white man was found afloat on a part of the wreck of the Brother Jonathan below the Klamath river about three days ago, that he was alive and had a good deal of money and that some of the Klamath Indians killed him; they robbed nearly all the trunks &c., that went ashore at that place.

Capt. Buckley has gone down with a part of his company to investigate the matter. There may not be any truth in the killing but the robbing is true.

Sailed—Brig Edward for Port Angeles.

AGAINST THE ADMISSION OF REBELS.—The fear has often been expressed that the States lately in rebellion would send members to Congress who are disloyal to the Government, and who have been leaders in the late insurrection. There is no danger that any such persons would be admitted to seats in Congress even if sent there by the people of the late rebellious States. The Thirty Seventh Congress, on the first of July, 1862 passed an act which may be found on page 19[illegible] of the Appendix to the Congressional Globe for the session just mentioned and which provides that every person elected or appointed to any office of profit under the Government of the United States, shall before entering upon the duties of such office take the following oath:

"I ——— do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof, that I have voluntarily given no aid countenance, counsel nor encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto, that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended Government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto so help me God."

This act will exclude from Congress all of that dangerous class, whose presence in that body would justly be so great a cause of alarm. Those who were active participants in the late rebellion will not be permitted to get high positions under our Government again. Congress will close its doors in the face of all the prominent traitors of the late rebellion who may seek admission into its halls. That body has the sole right to judge of the qualifications of its members. Each house will refuse seats to those who in its judgment are disqualified.

Ruffin the old man who fired the first gun on Sumter left a letter behind him when he [illegible] death stating that he could not survive the liberties of his country. Possibly not. But we are glad to know that the liberties of our country will survive him.

The Daily News of Petersburgh Virginia, the paper which continued to glorify the names of the "chivalry" of that State, because they had been rebels has been suppressed by authority.

Up to the middle of July it is said that the President had granted but one hundred and twenty five special pardons.

It must be admitted that the [illegible] of this city is assured, by any person no matter what [illegible] may be, who is inclined to take a look at the evidences about us. There are many substantial improvements in contemplation for the coming season among which we may mention a fine iron front, three story brick, 100 by 75 feet, by Mr. Jacob Kamm, and a block by Messrs. Gray [illegible] ted for this season, but delayed. The [illegible] of street work being done we cannot well take note [illegible] at this time. About $75,000 is being [illegible] on Front street, in putting down the Nicolson [illegible] and [illegible] which will give twenty [illegible] blocks of elegant street. First, Washington and [illegible] streets are to be planked while Second, Third and Fourth streets are to be yet finally graded and laid with walks. Outside of the above very many streets are being graded and filled. When it is re[illegible] that the above is the work of one season and that [illegible] made by means of capital which has been [illegible] our midst without the aid of Federal or [illegible] but with all these efforts combined in [illegible] the prosperity of Portland, the fact alone [illegible] confidence in the minds of everybody [illegible] and future of the city.

[illegible] Races.—Portland has no Bay View Park [illegible] the dust. In times like these, a trip to the [illegible] Park, east of East Portland, to witness a race [illegible] is something approaching to a pleasant [illegible]. The country east of this city begins to partake of [illegible] of an agricultural region. Many new [illegible] openings line the road, and there are en[illegible] signs of future prosperity visible. Having [illegible] race at the Multnomah course between Mac [illegible] we drove out to witness the second contest of [illegible] on Saturday last. The track was [illegible] a week ago, and although a few feet short [illegible] its situation is at present several [illegible] than full distance. There was a [illegible] at the track, among whom we noticed [illegible] of our most worthy citizens. The horses were [illegible]

[illegible] Boat.—The new ferry boat, built by [illegible] for crossing the river at this city is now [illegible] will be running on Wednesday of this [illegible] is of a new character—entirely different [illegible] on the coast, and similar to but few in the [illegible]. There is no helm, no paddle-wheels, simply [illegible] to be cared for. The motion is ob[illegible] of iron playing around two drums or [illegible] to receive the chain. An extra chain [illegible] a studding chain, [illegible] the upper [illegible] the guard. [illegible] Coal.—The first receipt of [illegible] from the [illegible] river mine amounting to about ten tons arrived [illegible] in tow of the steamer Ocelote on Thursday night last. This will be tested on the boats of the O. S. N. Company, and if found to be suitable as we hope it will be, it will most likely very soon form an important branch of trade in this city.

Manny's Reaper.—The first shipment of John H. Manny's reapers and mowers ever sent to Oregon were on board the steamship Brother Jonathan and were of ours [illegible]. They were consigned to Messrs. [illegible] & Lo[illegible] of this city, agents for the State.

Letter from Humboldt Basin

Humboldt Basin, Baker Co., Aug. 8, 1865.

Editor Oregonian:

Our mining season has about closed, there being barely water sufficient for an ordinary sluice head for one hour a day. There are about seventy five men in camp, most of whom will probably pass the winter here. Of these about fifty are working with rockers using the seepage water from the bedrock and are making more than average wages.

The miners just at this time are considerably exercised about the probability of their mining claims being taxed as "real estate," when there is nothing real in their title. They hold these claims by the sufferance of the General Government and are therefore unable to comprehend how or by what right Oregon taxes Government unreserved mineral lands.

We do not object to paying taxes on our ditches, flumes, reservoirs, sluices, mining tools, or mining appliances, but we do believe it to be unjust and wrong to tax our mining claims for their supposed mineral wealth from the surface to the bed rock and call it "real estate." When the question of taxation comes up in the Legislature the representatives from the agricultural districts simply hold that "the miner should be taxed as well as the farmer." This we do not object to. Do they tax land held by pre-emption with no title in fee-simple? Certainly not. Then why tax a miner for the occupancy of one hundred and fifty feet square of Government mineral land to which he has no title under the plea of its being "real estate." A more liberal policy than this should govern the representatives of the agricultural districts.

It certainly is to the interest of the farming portion of the population of Oregon to increase instead of diminishing the number of the consumers of the products of their farms. Insist upon taxing the mines beyond what you are taxed and you will soon find your consumers decreasing in number.

Mining is an arduous and precarious undertaking at best. He who adopts mining for a livelihood must become a pioneer, exile himself from home, friends and all that makes life's pathway pleasant and agreeable, live on the plainest kind of food, and from necessity cook it himself and "pray to God and keep his powder dry," for he knows not what moment in this vicinity, the savage may demand his scalp.

Two companies of Oregon troops are preparing winter quarters on the south side of Willow Creek near the Canyon City road about twenty miles south of this camp. This is what should have been done last year. When Spring opens, the soldiers can nip in the bud any attempts of the Indians to steal stock in their favorite haunt.

The "Democracy" and the Amendment.—The Boston Post, the leading "Democratic" paper of New England, has the following on the Constitutional Amendment:

We are in hopes the proposed amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery will soon be ratified by the requisite number of States, and that the subject will thus be removed from the arena of general discussion. That slavery must fall is decreed by public sentiment. The President's Proclamations, it is contended, have already abolished it—yet some dispute the constitutionality of these measures, and hold that the question remains to be determined by the Supreme Court. That the war has practically "rubbed it out" is evident, but to remove all doubt and to free the country from all agitation respecting its status, it is most desirable that the fact should be established by the fundamental law of the land. That the present National Executive feels this necessity is evident from his precaution in urging the Southern States to abjure all right to hold slaves in their reorganized relations to the General Government, the same doubt is manifest, also, by the desire of the loyal States, that the States in rebellion shall expressly prohibit slaveholding by their citizens. Now the adoption of the proposed amendment would settle the whole matter at once, and secure the country against the continuance of an agitation which has cost us so much blood and treasure.

For many years it has been known that modern "Democracy" signifies one thing here and another thing elsewhere. In New England we find this paper urging the adoption of the proposed Amendment, because the general sentiment of that part of the country favors this great measure. In Oregon and California their papers, without an exception, are opposing it, and this because they are silly enough to suppose that it can be defeated in these States. In California, whatever effort the party is capable of making will be directed against the Amendment. We are told here by the Copperheads that the New York World is not a "Democratic" newspaper because it has some remaining spark of loyalty for the Government. Next we expect to be informed by the partisan press of Oregon that the Boston Post is not "Democratic," because it advises the adoption of the Constitutional Amendment.

The Grave of Lincoln's Mother.—Near the little village of Gentryville, Spencer county, Indiana—the residence for seventeen years of the parents of Abraham Lincoln—under the aged forest-trees of the county, lie the remains of the mother of our martyred President. The moss-covered mound of earth, where peacefully sleeps the mother of this great and good man, is without headstone or monument to mark its locality, or relate to the passer by the name of its honored occupant. It was among the last expressed resolves of Mr. Lincoln to consummate a long contemplated desire to erect a suitable memorial over the grave of his mother. This resolve was beautifully expressed in a letter from the President to an old friend at Gentryville, written but a few weeks before his tragic death, in which he said that in the coming (present) summer he intended to visit the locality and make provision for procuring a testimonial of his affection for his mother.

The Rebel Leaders and the Assassination.—A letter to Col. Fishback, the well known Union leader in Arkansas, written by a former friend who acted prominently with the rebels during the war, says:

"As regards Davis' complicity in the assassination of Lincoln, he may be guilty. The leading men in the Confederate States generally considered the manner in which the North waged this war on the South as contrary to the usages of enlightened nations, and may have resorted to assassination in retaliation. Sherman's [illegible] at Atlanta and Columbia enraged the South very much. The assassination of Lincoln after the surrender of Lee of course was not intended, but I suppose the affair had been put on foot and could not be stopped."

The Copperhead journals, which have looked with strong disapprobation upon every step taken to bring to justice the assassins of President Lincoln, find fault because the criminals were not allowed more time to prepare for eternity. We should really like to learn from some reliable Copperhead source just how much time it would have taken to bring to full ripeness the moral perfections of Payne and Atzerodt and the rest, so that they would have been completely prepared for eternity. If the Government had undertaken to try out that experiment it would have put itself in a position very like that of old [illegible] who hearing that a crow would live two hundred years went and bought one in order to test that question of longevity.

A hotel is to be built at Bull Run. Here [illegible] it hasn't been much of a place to stop at.

Canyon City Mining District.—A friend who has just returned from Canyon City expresses the opinion that there is no [illegible] mining [illegible] on this coast. The [illegible] are opened and [illegible] pay well and there [illegible] great [illegible] taken up. The [illegible] that which [illegible] rence of [illegible] the class of men who so labor [illegible] industriously explore and develop the hidden riches of the mines. It is a common thing for some one to come in at the dead of night with a report of a new discovery and forthwith the whole camp is alive [illegible] the scene of excitement. With the majority [illegible] diggings that are known to pay well [illegible] the new diggings. This excitement probably lasts for a week, when the adventurers are seen crawling back to their homes wiser if not better miners. When men learn to realize the fact that [illegible] $6 diggings are much better than the average of mines, they will conclude that the Canyon City camp is the place for them and by steady industry make up for the time they have lost in chasing after new excitements.—W[illegible] Gazette.

The Old Country Irish Sentiment.—An Irish gentleman who arrived yesterday direct from Ireland, has been giving some interesting recitals of his personal experiences during his late visit to his native land. To the question: How did the people in Ireland look upon our National struggle, he replied: They were for the Union, had the odds ten to one. In some places if an American Copperhead had appeared to talk [illegible] lines, a riot would have ensued and they would have smashed him to death with their shillalahs. What have the Irish Copperheads, who have enjoyed the many blessings of our free Government and yet have aided in the attempt to subvert it, to say to the sentiment of their poor and honest countrymen who have only heard of the glorious land of freedom? Can you feel other wise than ashamed of your ingratitude, and your inferiority in manliness in comparison with your less experienced brethren in the Old Country?—N. Y. Flag.

Midnight.—There is something as beautiful as sublime in the hush of midnight. The myriad quiet sleepers, lying down each his life burden, insensible alike to joy or sorrow, helpless alike—the strong man as the infant, and over all the sleepless eye which since the world began has never lost sight of one pillowed head. Thoughts like those come to us in our wakeful night hours, with an almost painful intensity. Then eternity only seems real, and every day life a fable. But morning comes, and the stir and hum of life chase thought away, as the sun drinks up the dew drops, which like our thoughts, performed their refreshing mission ere they departed.

A New Lesson

From the Berlin [illegible] Gazette.

That piece of history which America in the space of a few years has passed through is in the highest measure instructive and will in its effects be more telling on the development of future ages than is now imagined.

Facts have transpired in this war which, without the light of experience, would have been set down as impossible.

A democratic republic, covering an area generally deemed excessive for a monarchy, has been involved in a civil war which was begun to effect its division into two independent political bodies. And mind, it is not a unitary State which is threatened by dissolution, but a federative republic, consisting of many single States, of which a part attempts to secede and form a separate confederation.

This is opposed by a Constitution which derives its strength neither from a natural necessity nor antiquity of duration, but solely from its legal and ideal authority.

And this idea of union acquires a potency so overwhelming, that for its preservation an entirely free people undertake and successfully close a war which, for enormity of sacrifices, has no parallel in the history of mankind.

If until now, it has been conceded that confederacies have little cohesion, and cannot resist the tendency of independence once aroused in the individual States, the grand event in America teaches that this theory will not stand. A territory large enough to contain ten States of considerable size has been stamped a Union by nothing but a Constitution, and this mere "bit of paper," as is the phrase, has so deeply and powerfully rooted in a great people reared in fullest liberty that for its support a war of such magnitude is being waged.

While this fact suffices to show that confederations based on liberty have more inherent stability than many "individual States" can boast of, let us record also the more important fact that in such emergencies it needs not the centralizing form of monarchy to keep the different parts of a federal body politic united.

What in the war of the Swiss Sonderbund we saw on a small scale, the coercion of the seceders by the central power, the world has again witnessed during the last years in the vast proportions of the American contest.

While the Netherlands under a monarchical government separated into two independent States—while the Empire of Austria, in spite of the conglutinating virtue of a dynasty, hardly keeps its parts together—we witness in the confederation of republican States a strength of union that challenges our admiration in the highest degree.

Another lesson which upsets theories heretofore existing, is the display of vast belligerent powers by an entirely free commonwealth.

It has been customary to prove by ancient history that republics can carry on great wars only as long as they are controlled by aristocracy; that democratic institutions do not stand the test of an armed conflict, but will through military dictatorship enter the career of imperialism, headed by the General who commands the army. Also, this so called "historical truth," to which Louis Napoleon would vindicate the same sacred regard that is due to the "truths of religion," has ceased to be a truth.

America has powers belligerent, so very belligerent, indeed, that the most belligerent Emperor who sets up imperial thrones in Mexico, experiences a nervous thrill at the idea that the Americans might take it into their heads rudely to checkmate his game. A democracy has military powers, and what is more, it is not afraid of Cæsarism.

The President of the republic, who has nothing to stand on but the law and the voice of the people, stamps armies from the ground, contracts loans of thousands of millions, appoints Generals, dismisses them, if they do not answer his expectations, cancels their agreements that he does not approve of, nay, hardly a week after the termination of the war he musters out of the service 400,000 soldiers, without the fear of dictatorship on the part of Generals or anarchy on the part of soldiers disbanded in such numbers.

These entirely modern lessons of modern history, whose truth is based on better evidence than those doctrines that claim the regard due the sacredness of religion, lead the train of many other facts that are equally instructive.

In certain circles the supposition still prevails that a State will go to pieces as soon as the representatives of the people have any power granted to them. That this is not so America teaches by its stupendous war and stupendous victory. The good old belief that statesmen thrive only in the higher regions of diplomatic aristocracy is another historical truth which America emphatically has shown to be a fiction.

That military heroes grow nowhere but on soil densely crowded with military academies is an axiom till now doubted only by political heretics, but America has committed the heresy to produce heroes far outshining the military champions of any other country.

Strange it is that such matter-of-fact things as fortifications and ship-building, which it was supposed only the so-called authorities understand, have received a new impulse in unhistorical America. The fortifications constructed in America on the largest scale, with astounding rapidity, on the spur of the moment, are now being earnestly studied, and those "authorities" who frown down the rule of majorities are clamorous for iron clads which owe their origin to the American war.

Truly these are new lessons. They will not fail to bear fruit in the Old World.

Botts and Pierpont.—It has been frequently asserted that John M. Botts was opposed to recognizing Mr. Pierpont as the Provisional Governor of Virginia. This he denies through the Washington Chronicle. He says that he could not approve the manner in which the Alexandria Constitution was forced upon the people of Virginia, it having been framed by eleven men and adopted by four or five hundred voters, but that Governor Pierpont was elected under the Constitution of 1851, and is therefore the legitimate Governor of the State. Mr. Botts denies that he has ever disputed the validity of the West Virginia government, as has been alleged by some newspaper correspondents. He insists, on the contrary, that the people of the West did right to set up a local government, and admits the legality of the act of separation from the East. He would prefer to see the old State reunited on many accounts, but he regards the question as finally settled. In respect to slavery Mr. Botts admits that slavery is destroyed by the events of the war, and although he would have preferred a more gradual process, he now acquiesces in the practical result, and thinks the whole people of the State would consent to the incorporation of a prohibitory clause in the Constitution. Although the views of Mr. Botts are not entirely in harmony with the prevalent sentiment of the country, it is due to him to say that he has no affinity with the class of men who have been reinstated in power and authority in Richmond by Gen. Patrick. He detests copperheads and rebels as much as the most orthodox Republican can do, and would not tolerate them either as officials or as manufacturers of public sentiment.

Pensioners in Rebel States.—Under the act of February 4, 1862, the names of all pensioners on the rolls of the States lately in rebellion have been dropped. Those who are prepared to prove their continued loyalty during the whole period of the rebellion can make application to the Commissioner of Pensions for their restoration to the rolls, proving their place or places of residence and means of subsistence since January 1, 1861. They must also execute and file in the Pension Office the oath prescribed in the amnesty proclamation of President Johnson.

Beauregard and Plymouth Rock.—Soon after the war broke out, while he was yet in high military repute at the South, Beauregard said: "When I reach Massachusetts my first act shall be to blow Plymouth rock out of existence; that will be the greatest and happiest moment of my life." From the fact that Plymouth Rock had not been blown out of existence at last accounts, it is fair to presume that Beauregard had not yet reached Massachusetts, and that consequently the greatest and happiest moment of his life had not transpired.

[illegible] of August [illegible] has the annexed [illegible] intelligence concerning matters [illegible] the plains:

Francis L. Rutter, who arrived [illegible] recently from Denver, Halleck and Bridger, we have learned some interesting items on things [illegible] matters.

Colonel Potter, [illegible] Sub-District commander at Denver, [illegible] not having yet [illegible] transportation has been hardly put [illegible] money. [illegible] at Julesburg the season past. [illegible] through Denver to the States were [illegible] from Denver [illegible] and Halleck [illegible] to Julesburg and from [illegible] last place to Laramie. It was like pulling teeth [illegible] to do it. All the available [illegible] and wagons about that section [illegible] in use transporting stores, [illegible] and so forth to Collins, Julesburg, Junction and other points where preparations are being made to stand the event which may turn up this Fall and Winter during the campaign. Two regiments of Michigan troops, part of Sheridan's old cavalry, left Julesburg on the 10th of July, under orders from General Connor, to make forced marches to Fort Collins and Halleck, for the more effective protection of the mails and travel on the route between the Black Hills and North Platte. They are by this time regulating matters so that henceforth we hope to hear of but little delay or fear of Indian attacks near Halleck, Sage Creek, Wash[illegible] [illegible] on this western division.

General Dodge is on an unofficial visit to Colorado for his health. General Sherman has recently relieved General Pope in command of the Northwest, and is now at his headquarters in St. Louis.

Only a tri-weekly stage runs between Denver and Virginia Dale. Thence to Halleck, North Platte and Sulphur Springs a weekly "Government wagon" (the Overland Stage Line having no stock on those two or three hundred miles between Virginia Dale and Sulphur), from Sulphur to Weber a tri-weekly stage, and from Weber to this place daily. Spotswood, Division Agent, is using [illegible] to stock that wide gap on the line. He sent to Denver for three or four teams and coaches on the 20th. There were at least a score of through passengers lying over at Virginia Dale and Denver for want of conveyances to come on. Not an Indian was seen by Rutter on the whole line during the twelve or fifteen days it took him to come from Denver to this city. The long expected "troops" from the States had not reached Julesburg, or General Connor's field headquarters at Laramie at the time our informant left—that is to say, in any strength or condition to scare many thousand red skins. Captain Shelton relieves Lieutenant Logan in Commissary Quartermaster duties at Bridger, and the latter joins his company. Lieutenant Furman and Captain Mathewson's companies were making good time going East when Rutter met them beyond Bridger.

South Boise Mines.—A correspondent of the Statesman, writing from Rocky Bar, under date of August 7th, has the following:

I hear of new strikes being constantly made and some are reported very rich. Capt. Bledsoe has his mill in full blast, and it works beautifully. It crushes about fifty tons per week, which for a five stamp mill, is doing well. I hear nothing more of the new quartz district and therefore conclude that it was only one of those rumors so common in a mining town. Col. O'Neil is building his mill in Clifton, half a mile above Rocky Bar, and just above the Idaho mill, on Bear Creek. Col. Raymond's mill, I hear, is also going up in that neighborhood, so that we may soon expect five mills at work near Rocky Bar besides the two already near completion on Red Warrior. When these mills all get to work we anticipate lively times here and intend to convince the most skeptical that South Boise is no humbug. These mills when they are all at work, will have a capacity of about eighty stamps, and will crush at least about eighty tons per day, which, at the rate at which rock here has always paid, will yield not less than two millions per annum. But we know of several mills destined for this place in addition to those already here, and are expected to be at work before winter sets in, so that we may calculate that, unless something unusual occurs, the production will be double or treble the amount estimated.

The English Slave Trade.—I find in a quiet corner of a London newspaper some statistics of the English slave trade, in the modified form in which it has been carried on for the last twenty years. It is generally supposed in England that when a cargo of negroes is captured from some slaver on the coast of Africa, the emancipated slaves are provided with a suit of clothes apiece, a Bible, some tracts, a dozen of Brass pale ale, and a five pound Bank of England note, and set ashore on the coast of Ashantee or Dahomey to enjoy their freedom. It appears, that the emancipated negroes, instead of being set ashore in this fashion, are conveyed to St. Helena, and thence shipped in assorted cargoes as emigrants or apprentices to various English colonies in the tropics. In this way since 184[illegible], Jamaica has received 18,[illegible]00, Trinidad, 40,000, British Guiana, 99,000, Mauritius, 212,500. The officers and crews of the African squadron are stimulated by large bounties paid by the British Government to take as many of those negroes as possible, and it is just possible that a few cargoes may be shipped from the coast just for the purpose of supplying ships with prize money and sugar planters with labor. The English are a very philanthropic people and would not willingly force anybody, white or black, to work more than necessary for a good digestion, but at the same time, they want cotton, sugar, coffee, and some other products.—Times' Correspondent.

Bound to Make his Mark in the World.—A young German who had gone into the army as a substitute, and had been swindled out of all his money, arrived in St. Louis a few days ago, having traveled all the way from New York on foot. He started from that city without a cent of money in his pocket, intending to make his way to California on foot. He had got along very well and was in exuberant spirits. He had no doubt about reaching his destination in due season. When hunger overtook him he would stop at a farm house on the road, earn a few dimes by a day's work and then resume his journey. When he reached East St. Louis he was entirely out of money, and chopped wood for twenty five cents, and was thus enabled to pay his ferriage and buy something to eat. He landed on this side with fifteen cents in his pocket, and struck out for California by the track of the Pacific railroad. We venture to predict that he will turn up a rich man before many years.

Whitewashing.—The London Saturday Review complains that whitewashing has become so general, there is no one left now except Judas Iscariot; at least there is no one left that would do an historical artist real credit. The whitewashers, says the New York Evening Post, do a story one that requires merely moderate skill. They have whitewashed King John, and Henry VIII and Richard III, and now Beesley has whitewashed Catiline. In the last number of the Fortnightly Review he has shown how dreadfully that great and good man has been misrepresented. He puts on the whitewash so thick that some of it cannot fail to stick. Catiline will never again look quite black, and even hesitating observers will own that at worst he appears a streaky sort of man. Considering that the whitewashing of Jeff. Davis, Beauregard and the rebel leaders has been the favorite work of the Saturday Review for four years past, this sarcastic comment by the [illegible] of others suggests the old saying that two of a trade never agree. We advised the Saturday Review to try its hand on Judas; it has had very poor luck with Davis.

General Sully's Campaign.—A St. Paul (Minnesota) paper contains correspondence from General Sully's expedition, from Dacotah Territory, stating that the original plan has been changed, and Sully's force will be divided into two expeditions. One will go up the Missouri river to Fort Rice, and from thence to Devil's Lake; the other will cross the Missouri at Fort [illegible], and proceed by way of Big Cheyenne Valley to [illegible] river, where they will establish a fort, and, leaving a garrison, the remainder of the troops will return to Omaha. So long as the Indians can take refuge in British territory, it is believed these expeditions will not be able to effectually put a stop to Indian outrages.

How it Progresses.—The work of reorganization in North Carolina is [illegible] progressing favorably. Governor Holden is energetically addressing himself to the task before him. He has already appointed [illegible] in more than [illegible] of the [illegible] thirty counties. One of [illegible] duties of these officials will be to administer the oath of allegiance to persons desirous of voting in the [illegible] election. [illegible] business-like, practical business. At the rate things are progressing we see no reason why North Carolina should not be fully restored to her proper status in the Union before next winter.

Emigration.—From present appearances the immigration to California will be comparatively small this year, though the overland travel was at first reported to be very large. Probably the bulk of those crossing the plains have gone in the direction of the new Territories of Idaho and Montana, which for the present appear to be attractive to the outside world.—S. F. Bulletin.

An [illegible] Prisons [illegible] Reports.—The [illegible] correspondent of the San Francisco [illegible] gives the following account of [illegible] [illegible] which the [illegible] themselves:

There is little [illegible] sympathy upon [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Having failed in attaining the measure of his ambition in the [illegible] [illegible] This loss has carried him immediately back to the level of his starting point.

Richmond correspondence of a recent date furnishes some interesting facts concerning the whereabouts of certain prominent rebels and their condition.

Colonel Northrop, the rebel Commissary General and peculiar pet of Jeff. Davis, is now living in North Carolina in great distress. Having resigned his office in Richmond before the evacuation in consequence of repeated charges of [illegible] against him, he went to North Carolina, where he applied himself to farming. He was commencing to make a start in this new field of enterprise, through the kindness of some friends; but just as he had planted his crops, Sherman's army came that way and ruined all. He is left without any means for the support of a large family, his property in Charleston, South Carolina, having been either destroyed by fire or confiscation. Truly is the lot of the rebel leaders a hard one.

The destruction of Governor Letcher's house at Lexington by Hunter's raiders has left him in a condition of real distress. So utterly stripped is he of all means of subsistence that his family have had to rely altogether upon kind friends for their support ever since his imprisonment. A few of his friends had actually to raise for him by contribution among themselves some $40 on the morning of his arrest to serve as a means to purchase some little requirements beyond what is served in his place of confinement. How it is that Extra Billy is at large while Governor Letcher is a prisoner the military authorities alone can tell. It excites some strange comment. The last earthly possession upon which Governor Letcher relied for a future start was $10,000 worth of tobacco, purchased by him since the expiration of his term of office, and that shared the fate of the thousands of hogsheads of that article deposited in the public warehouses in Richmond.

General W. L. Jackson, cousin of Stonewall, and for a long time a member of his staff, but more recently in command of a brigade of cavalry in Western Virginia and in the Valley, has arrived at Matamoras, whither he had repaired upon the surrender of Lee. He was Lieutenant Governor of Virginia during the latter part of Wise's administration, having succeeded Elisha Wyndham McComas, who resigned the office and removed to Nebraska. He subsequently returned to Chicago, where he acted for the last three or four years as editor of the Chicago Times. General Jackson was a man of fine ability, but did not distinguish himself much as a General. His friends have no idea whether he purposes to return or not.

Gen. Tochman, who served in the rebel army for the first two years of the war, having for part of the time full command of the Polish Legion, raised by a countryman of his, is at present in Richmond engaged in the practice of law. He resigned his commission in the army over two years ago because of an indignity offered to him by Davis in the promotion over him of a junior officer. He has few sympathies for the [illegible], for the treatment which he received at his hands was anything but just or generous. He is a lawyer of some ability, and bids fair to do well at his new profession.

Gen. George W. Randolph, who preceded James A. Seddon in the War Department, is now in Madeira with his wife, for the benefit of his health. He was suffering from severe bronchial affection contracted while serving as Secretary of War. The disease assumed so serious a type shortly before his departure as to have affected his lungs to an extent that rendered it necessary for him to discontinue making speeches. He was a lawyer of great eminence and by many degrees the most efficient member of Davis' cabinet and the purest and most high toned gentleman associated with the Government. He could not brook Davis' dictation, and hence his resignation of the Secretaryship of War. Davis made an appointment in his department contrary to his will, and when asked to sign the commission of the appointee he declined to do so, and thereupon resigned.

As illustrations of the spirit of resentment which lingers in the Southern mind, it is stated that Gen. William C. Wickham, once very popular in Virginia, is now repudiated by nineteen-twentieths of the voters because of a letter which he wrote soon after the evacuation counselling submission and arguing against the grounds upon which the war was waged by the South. A gentleman from his native county (Hanover) says that he could not get the vote of his own brigade for any office. That gentleman was always a warm supporter of his, but he now avows his purpose to vote against him for any position to which he may aspire.

The late rebel assistant Postmaster General, Henry St. George Offutt, is still in Richmond, but engaged in no employment. It is thought a pity that the services of so efficient a man in that department should be lost, and it is suggested that he may apply for a pardon with the view of seeking reinstatement in the Post Office Department at Washington, where he held a position before the war. It is intimated that some influence will be used with the President in his behalf, doubtless without effect.

Jeff. Davis Hears the Declaration of Independence.—They celebrated the Fourth of July at Fortress Monroe in a becoming manner. Gen. Roberts had the garrison under arms, and all due honor was paid the natal day of the Republic. We do not know whether Jeff. Davis has an almanac or not, but if he had lost the run of the days and months, the commander of the fortress unanimously reminded the fallen rebel chief of the august hour which a jubilant nation was then celebrating. It seemed unkind, no doubt, to Jeff. Davis, and he probably shuddered like a man with a Western ague when he was informed that "this is the Fourth of July."

General Roberts is a humane man, as well as a good and gallant soldier, and he was resolved to do what he might towards bringing his prisoner to a sense of his guilt and a desire for repentance. So the Declaration of Independence was read in the hearing of Jeff. Davis, and Jeff. Davis could but listen to the immortal document. It was cruel in a certain sense, but then it was a kind admonisher, and it perhaps may be the means of doing him benefit.

We would like to know what his thoughts were when the clarion voice of Adjutant Kent read the following passage: "He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burned our towns and destroyed the lives of our people." Did he think of the Alabama and Florida, the burning of Chambersburg, and the wholesale murder of our Union soldiers by starvation at Richmond, Salisbury and Andersonville?

And did not his conscience smite him in the face when, further on, the Adjutant [illegible] pronounced that other indictment: "He has excited domestic insurrection amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions." Did he remember the commissions issued to the officers of Albert Pike's savage regiments on the frontiers of Arkansas and Missouri?

Surely he felt the barb within his soul, and like Cain he must have exclaimed in agony, "My punishment is greater than I can bear." It has been a long time since Jeff. heard the Declaration read. It ought to do him good. It will remind him of the fathers of the Republic, and he can contrast their efforts for the establishment with his infamous attempt to overthrow the glorious structure which they cemented with their treasure and their blood.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Infamous [illegible] Wood.—The evidence taken before the Washington Military Commission establishes the fact that Ben. Wood, late a member of Congress from the city of New York, and editor of the Daily News, has been in the pay of the rebels. It has long been suspected that this was the case, but it is now established on the oath of more than one witness. Everybody was surprised at the tenacity with which he clung to the [illegible] [illegible] $25,000. [illegible] will at once be arrested and brought to trial for treason, in adhering to the enemies of the country. [illegible] John Mitchel [illegible] [illegible] for a pecuniary consideration.

The Post Office Department is now self-supporting. Its profits for the last six months of 1864 were $[illegible]2,200, and for the first six months of this year, will be much larger. When the [illegible] power ruled the country it was quite otherwise.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!
The Remedy for Curing
CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,
Asthma, Croup,
Diseases of the Throat, Bronchitis, Pains and Oppression of the Chest and Lungs, Difficult Breathing and all the Diseases of the Pulmonary Organs.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC AND DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus; CHANGES THE SECRETIONS AND PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts, gives strength to the digestive organs; brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is WARRANTED TO BREAK UP THE MOST DISTRESSING COUGH IN A FEW HOURS TIME, if not of too long standing. IT IS WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction, even in the MOST CONFIRMED CASES OF CONSUMPTION. IT IS WARRANTED NOT to produce costiveness (which is the case with most remedies) or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. IT IS WARRANTED TO BE PERFECTLY HARMLESS to the most delicate [illegible] although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. THERE IS NO REAL NECESSITY FOR SO MANY DEATHS BY CONSUMPTION, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.
